Challenging fun while climbing

Sensory deprivation climbing (see, hear and feel nothing)

Build team communication and trust

Overcome personal limits

A fun and adventurous team experience

Sequence of events

After an initial safety and equipment briefing you'll start on the beginners routes to warm up before heading onto the more challenging routes. The group will be divided into smaller teams. One team member will receive handicaps at the start others won't. Deprived of their senses, they must be lead safely and surely through the climbing route. The handicaps will then get swapped around later so that all participants can experience being led, but also take the vital responsibility of leading. Good communication and a coordinated approach are mandatory requirements to pass this challenge. Our instructor ensures absolute safety for everyone at all times. Communication is a must. There is also time for participants, with their new-found climbing skills, to climb the course on their own.

Dark Adventure: Team climbing in the dark

A very special social experience of BergWerk.Berlin is climbing in the dark. Our eyes are undoubtedly our most important sensory organ, which is why "underground" environment in the dark with only helmet torches shining will stimulate your senses in a unique way. Shortly after your eyes adjust to the dark, the lights get turned off and you start to move vertically and horizontally with a cone of light from your helmet through the mine, the senses get unexpectedly stimulated to the point where dimensions seem to dissipate. It's guaranteed to be a special and unforgettable experience!

Main focuses

Training of sensory perception

Sensitise and stimulate the senses

A fun and adventurous team experience

Exklusive event

Sequence of events

First participants will get equipped and receive a safety briefing. Climbers will first head through the course with the lights on to get a feel for the routes.

After climbers feel comfortable, the lights go out with only the waterfall will stay illuminated as a point of reference to show the way. This is when eyes and ears will be properly trained and moving around will become more intuitive.

After the half of the climbing time is over, the waterfall light will also be switched off. This is when climbers will need to use their helmet lamps to find their way and will only be able to see their immediate climbing vicinity. Distances will become difficult to distinguish, sensory perception will change and height will feel completely different while the adrenaline level rises. Climbers will feel like a group of cave explorers on an expedition into the unknown. A truly unforgettable adventure.

Depending on personal experience and age, every participant can decide how high they would like to climb. A perfect training experience for your senses even for experienced climber.

A fun and adventurous team experience

Sequence of events

The team event is divided into three Modules:

First participants will undertake a teamwork exercise on the ground or also on the slack line which requires communication skills, strategical thinking and mutual trust from everyone.

Once equipped, the teams then head out onto the climbing routes and climbers will be separated into groups which will be expertly watched over by our instructors to ensure safety for everyone. Herein lie challenges to pass, which call only be overcome by working as a team. Climbing with handicaps (blind, deaf, dumb, limited sense of touch) requires specific communication and the ability to be led also to lead. Fun and excitement are guaranteed, wherein safety always takes the highest priority.

The last module consists of participants climbing the whole course by themselves with their new-found climbing skills. Even our via ferrata ALPINISTA and the 12m high FREEFALL. Upon request, crate climbing and abseiling each other are also possible.

Team Adventure: Treasure hunt at BergWerk.Berlin

Your mission is to find the treasure that has been lost over 500 years ago. After a large mining accident in 1506 the young miner Oswald Bartel was buried alive. Before he died he left his legacy behind for his fiance and love of his life Anna, hidden somewhere in the pit. Oswald's body was found 60 years later and was properly buried. Anna died shortly after his burial without ever having being touched by another man. The legendary treasure has however remained lost. A variety of cryptic clues, an ancient skeleton and a labyrinth of seemingly impossible obstacles await your expedition team. Only together will you have a chance to dig up Oswald's secrets and find the legendary treasure. But only maybe...!
